MRS. BLINKINS

And How the Good Lady Attended the Church Social.

"The Ladies' society of the Congregational church will give a sociable next Thursday evening. Admission, twentyfive cents."

Mrs. Blinkins had just put a cake in the oven to bake, when, looking for a bit of paper to put over it to keep it from getting too brown, her eyes chanced to light upon the above advertisement in the morning Bazoo. She read it, and then she said to herself: "Well, I've a good mind to go; I just want to see how these sociables compare with ours," (Mrs B. is a Presbyterian;) "and if they really do make cake fit

This was Wednesday, and, when Thursday evening arrived. Mrs B. put on her alpaca dress, her broad collar, her large round breast-pin, containing the picture of a youngish looking man, with a broad neck tie, neat side-whiskers, a guilty expession, and said to be a likeness of Blinkins some thirteen years b fore; her silk shawl, her best bonnet, and carrying her cord reticule, in about twenty minutes was paying her admittance fee to sociable. Her first idea on looking around was, that there was a pretty fair attendance, and the next that when the Presbyterians gave a sociable there should be more tables than there were here, and something else to make it attractive than three or four giddy girls, with white caps on and flirty little white aprons; and then she reached out her hand to a fat lady who was standing by one of the tables, and said: "La, me! Mrs. McBrady, how d'ye

"Mrs. McBrady said: "Pretty weil, I thank ye," and then her curiosity getting the better of her manners, "but I declare, Mrs. Blinkins, I am surprised to see you here."

"Yes," said Mrs. Blinkins, "I am a little surprised myselt, but I'm no hand to slight a church entertainment because the church isn't your own; and as I was just passing, I thought I'd drop in and see now you were getting along."

"Well, we've done very well so far; we have a postoffice, a grau bag, and several other attractions, and thy ail seem to be well patronized. "Ye-e-s, but it does seem to me you ought to have got up something new. Our church hasn't had any of them doin's for better'n a year; but I wou't keep you. I'll just slide around and see who's here.'

another minute she was standing by the lemonade well

"Dear me," said she to the bright eyed young lady in charge, "what thin-looking lemonade; 'pears to me as if you were pretty scarce of lemons when you made that. Now, our church always furnishes the best lemonade that can be made, and then nobody feeis cheated, d'ye see? But, then, I suppose you mean well, and its all for the church, anyhow." And she passed on smiling pleasantly.

"Old jade," muttered the girl. But Mrs. B. was out of hearing and had just accosted a young lady, who with paper and pencil in hand, was taking down names for chances in a satin toilet cushion. "How many names have you?" Mrs. B.

"Oh, about forty. Can't I put yours down?" answered the young lady.

"No, I believe not; our church is little rigorous about these things, and between you and me, it really does seem like gambling, you know; and if I were in your place, I'd get up something else the next time." And she drew her mouth down at the corner, with a pitying look, and then nudged her way to the "postoffice."

"Any letters for me?" she asked in a facetious manner, as she leaned over the edge of the dry goods box that was doing duty as a "postoffice," and gazed down on the pretty little Miss who was acting as its mistress. "No'm, I believe not," she returned,

"Well, never mind, I know there wa'nt.

I'd give you a nickel anyway, but our church never has such things, and I can't approve of 'em."

By this time she was near one of the refreshment tables, and seeing a vacant chair, she sat down.

[I declare these cakes are made with lard" "What shall I get you, madam," said one of the ladies wearing a white apron. "Oh, I dunno," replied Mrs. B. "What

Now, in our church, we use pure cream and eggs we can see right through; but I suppose you've done your best, and now I'll just put the reof this cake on piate in my riticule. A stock company with a capital of $50,000 has been formed for the purpose of carrying on the manufacture of beer on a large scale. The company will be composed of substantial and wealthy business men, and there can be no possible doubt but that the enterprise will prove a gratifying success to those engaged in it.

Mr. R. C. hended in the Mining Districts of Illinois.

St. Louis, May 26.-Accounts from Col linsville, Ill., this morning, report everyone from Edwardsville and the other from Taylorville, are on the ground, and no trouble at that place or in that vicinity is apprehended. Col. Berkley of the regiment of national guards is in command of the troops, and Deputy Sheriff Ragland, of St. Clair county, and Sheriff Holz, of Modesor county are there with civil posses.

The Abbey company's two pits which work by machines, the Confidence and Brookside mines, and the two pits of the Collinsville company, all of which employ only non-union miners, resumed work this morning. These mines are on the Vandalia railroad, and there is no further danger of molestation as long as the authorities guard them. The strikers offered no opses, and have left the neighborhood.

The only other mines in operation in St. The strikers have ordered them to shut down, but since both the company and state authorities have taken such active measures to preserve order, it is not likely they will make any demonstration there It looks now as though the trouble is ended, but whether the miners generally will resume work at once is not known. It is said the operators are willing to pay the miners two and a half cents, the price demanded by them for digging, but refused to submit to the other terms and conditions imposed. Probably a compromise will be effected in a few days, when operations throughout the district will be resumed.
